The year 2009 saw a series of important changes in the China individual tax regime, like the tightening of the remittance process for employees from overseas, introduction of new tax registration requirements for frequent cross-border travellers and stricter control of expatriate employees' tax-free benefits. These changes have caused major headaches for both employers and employees, with impact on their companies' deployment and compensation strategies.

In this seminar, experts from PwC will address the latest developments regarding these changes and share their experiences on how employers and employees are reacting to them. They will provide an overview of the China and Hong Kong personal tax systems, with focus how it affects cross-border employees and related matters.

About the speakers:
